FORENSIC ANTHROPOLOGY EXPOSED: the why
and how of human identification

Owen Beattie examines the field of forensic anthropology and the various methods used to determine the identity of human remains, including the determination of sex, age at time of death, elapsed time since death, and the process of decomposition. Hear case studies from around the world that include the identification of missing persons and homicide victims, mass disasters and genocide. Owen will provide interesting contrasts between the “forensic anthropology” that is depicted on television and in popular fiction, and “real” forensic anthropology.
